Module Aims
This module aims to build on issues studied in Becoming a Person 1 and 2. It critically considers the role of theory/ research in understanding developmental issues and individual differences in infancy, childhood, adolescence, adulthood and later life. You will engage with topics of relevance to contemporary developmental psychology and consider the relationship between developmental psychology and cognate disciplines such as biology and sociology and developmental psychology's explanation of individual difference. Team work skills will be developed through a poster presentation.

Outline Syllabus

Historical foundations of childhood. The origins of developmental psychology. Theories of development. Appropriate methods for the study of development. The behavioural capacities of newborns. The development of attachment. Social and emotional development, including gender development and ethnicity. Temperament and personality development. Individual differences in the lifespan. Communication and language development. Perceptual, motor and cognitive development. Theory of mind. Atypical development in childhood. Identity development. Adolescent transitions. Adolescent distress. Adulthood transitions. Successful ageing. Not every topic will be covered in every year. Topical issues may be covered in more depth and others in outline only.

Learning Outcomes

1	a) contrast and evaluate different theoretical perspectives and explanations in developmental and lifespan psychology.
2	a) review psychological theory and research in order to explain human development; b) assess how developmental behaviours can be researched.
3	a) design and present effective poster presentations supported by ICT; b) demonstrate presentational communication skills; c) work as part of a team.

Learning, Teaching and Assessment Strategy

Lectures will provide an overview of theory and research (LO1 a, LO2 a-b). Workshops in semester 1 will allow for group work to prepare for the poster presentation (LO2 a-b, LO3 a-c). You will be expected to engage in guided reading and searching for additional information in preparation for the essay (LO1 a, LO2 a-b).
