Module Aims
Archaeology in Contemporary Society aims to embed skills of critical evaluation in examining the role of archaeology today. It will consolidate themes already explored in earlier modules, and prepare students for communicating the value of archaeology in a changing and global world.

Outline Syllabus
The module will draw on several themes, such as the role of archaeology for political use/misuse, how archaeology is reflected in popular media, the value of public and community archaeology, debates around alternative narratives in interpretation of the past, and the epistemologies of the discipline.

Learning Outcomes
Outcome Number	Description
01	Critically evaluate the role of archaeology in contemporary society.
02	Construct logical, critical arguments.
03	Successfully communicate the value and purpose of archaeological research.

Learning, Teaching and Assessment Strategy
The module will be taught through a series of lectures and seminars. Students will be expected to undertake directed reading and research throughout the module, reporting back during group seminars. The module will draw on contemporary media and events throughout the year, requiring students to critically analyse and reflect on prominent themes. Delivery of sessions online planned initially, may be brought on campus dependent upon conditions. The module will be assessed through a reflective learning journal and a presentation. The reflective journal is designed to engage students with their learning progress, and will include exploring and evaluating different ways of communicating archaeological information to the public. The presentation will form part of a mini-conference, where students can present in a variety of styles, including a traditional, poster, or film/multi-media presentation. Students will be required to write an accompanying press release for their chosen presentation.
