Module Aims
To enable you to: * Develop a good grounding and advanced appreciation of key concepts, theories, historical and contextual perspectives and analytical frameworks for examining the causes and dynamics of transnational problems and challenges, and also for examining the development, implementation and effectiveness of international responses to such problems. * Examine at an advanced level processes of 'securitisation' and 'de-securitisation' of transnational problems, and the significance of these processes for the politics of mobilising effective and sustainable international responses. * Achieve a detailed and advanced understanding of selected major contemporary transnational problems, and responses to them: applying and gaining experience with the relevant concepts and analytical frameworks. The selected transnational problems to be examined in detail will relate to international environmental problems, trafficking and international crime, with the specific issue areas varying from year to year, according to topicality and recent research.

Outline Syllabus

Grounding in key concepts, perspectives and analytical frameworks for examining transnational problems and responses to them; including roles and significance of transnational actors and processes in international relations and in security studies, and development of strategies and institutions for governance of such transnational challenges.

Explore and analyse the significance of processes of 'securitisation' and 'de-securitisation' of transnational problems. This will be done generically, and with reference to a range of empirical cases and examples.

Detailed examination of 2 -3 selected major contemporary transnational problems relating to environment, trafficking and crime; and international responses to them, applying the relevant concepts and analytical frameworks developed earlier in the module. The selected transnational environmental, trafficking and crime problems to be examined in detail may vary each year.

Learning Outcomes

Outcome Number	Description
01	Explain and assess the uses of key concepts, theories and perspectives for understanding transnational processes and the development, implementation and effectiveness of international responses to them.
02	Analyse and assess the significance of processes of 'securitisation' and 'de-securitisation' of transnational problems.
03	Critically examine in detail, at an advanced level, selected contemporary transnational problems relating to the environment, trafficking and crime; and the development of international responses to them.
04	Develop a policy analysis of a specific transnational issue, and evaluate policy options, demonstrating capacity and skills to engage with contemporary policy debates in a sophisticated way.
05	Generate clear, concise and coherent advanced analysis and communication, tailored to the appropriate audience.
06	Gather and analyse information about transnational processes and responses to them; and conduct advanced library research and work independently using advanced academic analysis skills.

Learning, Teaching and Assessment Strategy

Teaching will be through a combination of lectures, seminars, class simulations and class exercises, formative coursework and class discussions.

Learning will develop through participation in lectures, seminars, class discussions, simulations and exercises, coursework, directed study, and tutor support.

Formative assessment will be undertaken through feedback from: class discussions, exercises and simulations.

Summative assessment will be through a final examination, assessing the module content and students' research & analytical skills relevant to contemporary transnational policy challenges.

Mode of Assessment
Type	Method	Description	Weighting
Summative	Examination - Closed Book	180 minutes unseen examination	100%
Formative	Self and Peer Assessment	Group/seminar discussions supervised by tutor	N/A
